

Introduction

Businesses rely on IT for storing, processing and communicating information. Information is one of the most valuable assets of any organization and the protection of that information is critical. Information security is the protection of information from a wide range of threats and vulnerabilities to ensure business continuity and privacy protection.

Provisional Security Group takes a fresh approach to business security and privacy protection, with efforts focused primarily on the direction of responsibilities and awareness pertaining to the suitable implementation of vital Managerial and Operational Security Controls.

Technical Security Controls are normally thought of when computer security is mentioned, when in fact these machine-oriented controls (or "how's") are the last step in the process and are implemented to directly support the Managerial and Operation Controls. Provisional Security Group creates an additional layer of valuable objectivity by addressing the "what's", "why's", and "who's" of business security.

Provisional Security Group's top-down approach reverses the current thinking that System Administrators are responsible for developing a security plan and program.
